

Telling Stories

Art works are sometimes made in order to describe various stories. Actual events or imagined narratives have been written and passed down as stories. Such stories have also stimulated artists' imagination, in other words, power to visualize figures and appearances, and many art works were born. Some works are based on myths, legends and tales, and other works are on novels, poems or dramas. There are also works describing actors and actresses who perform stories, and works on theaters or stages. All sorts of ways how art works relate to stories can be found. Let us get into art through stories and from art into stories.

Approximately 100 works by 30 artists will be on view.
